Thirty-eight clinical faculty members indicated their levels of perceived student communication skill on a 100-point scale. Students in this latter group received 3 identical, 10-minute videotaped assessments.

On average, faculty members rated students' communication skills significantly higher than they did in the previous year. The correspondence between ratings made by the faculty and the students on the same videotaped examinations was highly significant. This approach might provide a practicable measure of student performance and might be an alternative to the traditional written examination.Q: How to scroll a UIScrollView with a UIPanGestureRecognizer? I have a UIScrollView with a UIPanGestureRecognizer. The UIScrollView is centered in a UIView so that when I do [myScrollView setContentOffset:CGPointMake(0, 200)]; it will scroll to the right edge of the UIView and the UIPanGestureRecognizer will work. However, once the UIPanGestureRecognizer reaches the edge of the screen, the scrollView will not scroll and the UIPanGestureRecognizer becomes useless. If I set the contentOffset at a point that is not near the edge of the screen, the UIScrollView will not scroll and the
